Introduction.

This document provides a listing of commercial hazardous waste management facilities, along with information on the types of commercial services offered (e. g., treatment, storage, disposal or recycling), and types of wastes managed. This list does not constitute a list of approved facilities. It is a compilation of data that is currently available from EPA data bases. The data presented herein is to the knowledge of the EPA representative of the commercial services available at these facilities at the time of data collection. The remainder of this introduction discusses the source of data, what can and cannot be interpreted from the data, and provides an overview of the document organization with examples for use.

The Data Source.

The EPA Office of Solid Waste has utilized the most recently available data source for the production of this directory; the "1986 National Screening Survey of Hazardous Waste Treatment, Storage, Disposal, and Recycling Facilities". The screening survey was administered to all known hazardous waste treatment, storage, disposal, and recycling facilities during early 1986, for the purpose of gathering information on the nation's capacity to manage hazardous wastes. Included in the survey administration were facilities with onsite as well as commercial (offsite) services; however, this directory has been prepared using only those facilities indicating the existence of commercial services. From this data source, facility name, address, contact person name, and phone number were selected for locating each facility. Other data extracted from the survey include the waste groups managed and commercial management practices available at the facility. In an effort to produce a directory with information that is as accurate as possible, additional criteria were applied to each facility. The additional criteria were identified in other data sources maintained by the EPA. First, the Hazardous Waste Data Management System (HWDMS) data library was checked for indication of a facility closure date; if the HWDMS data library indicated the facility is closed it was then removed from the directory. Second, an investigation of land placement facilities was made to determine if the facility has retained interim status for land disposal. If a facility failed to pass this criterion, all land placement processes were removed from the screening survey data source; if no additional commercial processes remained, the facility was then removed from the directory listing.

Interpretation of the Data.

It is important to understand some background information about the data sources to avoid making invalid uses of this directory. First, although the screening survey was sent to all facilities listed in the HWDMS data library, it is possible that any specific facility might have been overlooked when the universe of facilities was initially identified. Second, the definition of terms for waste management practices and waste groups was not explicitly defined on the screening survey form. Therefore, classification of specific EPA waste codes, such as K001, U056, and so on, into the eight waste groups specified on the survey was done by each facility manager. It is possible that some variation exists from person to person in how specific waste codes were classified into waste groups. A similar problem may occur with identification of management practices; however, less ambiguity exists with this data.

One should also note that although the directory lists all waste groups that are commercially processed at the facility, not all waste groups are necessarily managed in each practice available at the facility. For example, a facility may accept solvents and PCB's for commercial management. The facility may also have commercially available incineration and recycling operations. However, both waste groups are not necessarily processed by each management practice; solvents may only be recycled, while PCB's are incinerated.

Directory Organization.

The directory has been prepared in a form which will assist one in locating facilities that commercially process waste. The directory begins with an alphabetic listing of all facility names and their directory identification numbers. Next, the reader will find a listing of all facilities with commercial processes available. Following this section are several appendices which group facilities with like waste groups or management practices. The user of this directory must identify, from one or more of the appendices, a list of directory identification numbers that may be used to locate the facility name, address, and contact information in Section II. The key to locating a facility is through the directory identification number. This number is used throughout the directory, and uniquely identifies each facility. The number is five characters long, beginning with a two-character state postal code, e. g. AL for Alabama, KS for Kansas. The remaining three positions of the identification number are a unique sequence number. All other sections of the directory reference this five-character identifier. In Section II, the user of the directory will find all data for each facility. Included is facility name, EPA facility identification number, and hazardous waste operations and waste groups. This section is categorized by state, with facilities listed alphabetically by name. One will find the directory identification number above each facility name. Following the facility name and address section are several Appendices which organize the information in various formats. Each appendix exhibits a map of the United States indicating the number of facilities in each state that are listed in the specific appendix. Within each appendix, directory identification numbers, facility name and city are listed by state. Within each state, facilities are grouped by general geographic region. The geographic regions were assigned as a function of the postal zip-code to help one find facilities nearby. The first eight appendices list facilities managing specific waste groups. For example, Appendix 1 lists all facilities that commercially manage Acidic/Corrosive wastes.

Appendices 10, 11, 12, and 13 list facilities by management practice. The appendices identify facilities with 1) incineration, 2) disposal, 3) recycling and 4) treatment other than incineration. These listings follow the same pattern as other appendices, with directory identification number, facility name and city, organized by geographic region within each state.

Appendices 9 and 14 summarize all facilities by waste groups managed and waste management practices, respectively. These appendices are also organized by state, utilizing the directory identification number and city to aid in facility selection.
